

To Whom it May Concern,

I find these proposed changes to the USPS delivery services to be a terrible idea. The Post Office does not need to have the services intentionally slowed. For some communities, the post office is the only affordable option for the services they provide.

It is also abhorrent that someone with vested interests in direct competitors to the Post Office is allowed to implement changes that will make the post office weaker, and the companies from which he profits stronger.

Thank you for your consideration,

Alexis Stark
